Helping Children Deal with Their Feelings

Children need to have their feelings accepted and respected. You can listen quietly and attentively. You can acknowledge their feelings with a word like, "Oh... Mmm... I see..." You can give the feeling a name: "That sounds frustrating!" You can give the child his wishes in fantasy: "I wish I could make the banana ripe for you right now!" All feelings can be accepted. Certain actions must be limited. "I can see how angry you are at your brother. Tell him what you want with words, not fists."
